Dear Mr. Newman

I read an article in the St Louis Globe, Thursday Morning about Coin Collectors, and I wonder if you would take the time to see if you can help me

The remodled an old home, and under some linoleum my grandson found a tiny coin. We have talked to some Collectors here, but no one knows anything about it. It is only slightly more than 1 cm across, it is round and at one time had ridges similar to a dime It is gold, or at least gold colored. on one side it looks like this: the other side like:

It is very tiny and someone added a tiny ornament of gold at the top, as if to wear it as an earring. Hoping you will at least answer my letter, I remain

Dear Mr. Newman:

The State Historical Society has in its files, photographs of an old drawing of Herculaneum from an 1817 $20 banknote. I believe you own the original banknote. We had some additional information about the drawing on the back of one picture but that particular picture is missing.

A question has come to our office about the shot tower at Herculaneum. We need confirmation that the tall building on the hill in the picture is the tower. Also do you know, how authentic is the drawing? We have another old drawing where the shot tower appears to be round.

If you could kindly supply these answers and any other pertinent information about this old drawing, I would appreciate it very much. Thank you for your assistance.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mrs. Dains:

With respect to your inquiry concerning the view of Herculaneum on the 1817 $20 banknote of the Bank of St.Louis, I am glad to give you the little we know.

The tall building on the hill is the shot tower. The smelting furnace is half way up the hill. There was another shot tower, as you know, on the south bluff of Herculaneum but this, of course, does not appear in the picture.

The engraving on my banknote was done by Leney and Rollinson, New York banknote engravers. They did not come to St. Louis and no doubt had a sketch sent to them. They probably took artistic liberties with the sketch to produce a pleasing design. I have no other knowledge as to whether the tower was round or square but my guess is that it would be square if made of wood. It was not a fortification, and to build it of stone would be quite unnecessary. On the Partial View of St. Louis, done by the same banknote engravers, the tower of Fort San Carlos is round and, properly, so.

Please let me have a photocopy of the drawing which you have showing the shot tower to be round.

I am still recovering from the fact that in your bulletin you published the Harry Gleick articles on early Missouri banking without pointing out that they had been written fifty years ago. There has been much research on the subject since then and I thought the date of writing the article should have been mentioned when you had knowledge of it.

We are delighted to be helpful at any time.

Dear Eric:

The Library Project 21 report was presented to the Board of Trustees at the March meeting. I was very impressed both with the plan and the presentation.

Thank you for your participation in developing the plan. This planning process has been extremely valuable to the University.

When we began, I had high hopes for Project 21. However, the results have exceeded even my highest expectations. The advice from you and other National Council members has added great value to the process and strengthened planning at the University immensely.

Let me tell you what we expect to happen from this point on. First, our Deans Planning Committee will review the reports from all the schools (additional reports will be presented to the Board in May and October) to identify common themes and issues. This report will be verbally presented at the October Trustee meeting and, in addition, a written report will be submitted to the Project 21 Trustee Steering Committee, chaired by John F. McDonnell. This trustee committee will study the Project 21 and Deans Planning Committee reports and meet with my successor to lay out the major goals for Washington University in the years ahead.

We, of course, don't see that planning will stop as the Project 21 reports are submitted to the Trustees. We hope, and expect, that the plans will be implemented and updated regularly with the continuing help of our National Councils. Implementation will be even more important than the intense planning that has already taken place.

Thank you again for your participation in this most important planning effort. I look forward to your continuing involvement and help as we move forward in implementing our plans.

Yours sincerely,

Bill

Dear Bill:

Over your many wonderful years as Chancellor of Washington Univeristy you have written to many people your sincere thinking, your informative reports and your acknowledgements. Evelyn and I have appreciated those sent to us.

Your most recent letter involves Library Project 21. I want to thank you for the opportunity to have participated as a member of the Library National Council. The problems were fascinating because of a plethora of unknown future alternatives, but the emphasis on making all facets of knowledge available to everyone pervaded all of the activities. The input of the faculty, the staff and the members was based upon dedicated and skilled devotion to the project, which is not often experienced in that quality. I hope the implementation of the work on Library Project 21 will be as exciting as the planning. Thank you for a stimulating opportunity.

May your own change of hats at Washington University be a continuing satisfaction to you and Ibby.

Sincerely,

Gentlemen:

Just recently, when visiting the house where I grew up in Northern France, I discovered the silver medal photocopy of which is attached, bearing the effigy of LOUIS IX (who, as you undoubtedly know, left his mark in history under the name SAINT-LOUIS), King of France from 1226 through 1270.

Since apparently the medal dates way back, it could arise the interest of a collector of historic items featuring French royalty, inasmuch as the city of ST. LOUIS was named after this King.

If you are interested and willing to tentatively give me an approximate value, based on your specialized catalogs, I might consider selling this old medal upon meeting with you at your convenience.

I look forward to hearing from you shortly. Meantime, many thanks for your kind attention.

Sincerely,

Dangleterre

Dear Eric:

Your note asked about Honorary Memberships in SPMC. All thus far (8) were awarded in 1967, 1969 and 1970, before I went on the Board. Three former presidents received them, Glenn before he became president, Tom and George after. The nomination was made by George Wait, Vernon Brown and Tom Bain.

For a time before I was made chiarman of the Awards Committee no plaques were issued because they were waiting for a club emblem to be adopted. I was asked to have plaques for those past years prepared and that was completed in the past year. Others who have received Honorary Memberships are: Mrs. Elizabeth Osmun, Charles Afflek, Wm. Donlon, James A. Conlon and Barbara Mueller.

I hope this clears up your questions.

I received a letter from President Roy Pennell recommending that Honorary Memberships in the Society be conferred upon Edward Weitzen and Robert C. Charles, Chairman and Vice President, respectively, of the American Bank Note Company. Since nominations for Honorary Memberships require the recommendations of three members of the Board I relayed the suggestion to members I was in contact with on committee business.

Members of the Nominating Committee favored Honorary Membership for Mr. Weitzen at this time, holding the other nomination in abeyance. Members of the Awards Committee indicated approval of both gentlemen for Honorary Membership.

Honorary Membership is conferred by the Executive Board. The Awards Committee is conducting a poll of the Board; please let the chairman know your feeling on the matter so the award plaque (or plaques) may be ordered with the other awards if approved.

Sincerely,

Dear Forrest:

With respect to honorary memberships for the president and vice president of the American Bank Note Company, I do not have sufficient facts to pass on the matter. All I know is that American Bank Note Company and Roy Pennell must have some joint financial arrangement with respect to selling copies of bank notes in silver, etc. Because of the business relationship, I think there should be a supported recommendation for the action based on some other justifiable factors.

Perhaps others present have a similar feeling as there seems to be a difference of opinion between the nominating committee and the awards committee.

Dear Forrest:

I received a letter from Roy dated June 19, 1975, with respect to the proposed honorary membership. In my opinion there is no basis for an honorary membership for either one. While the American Bank Note Company has been generous, there are many others who have been much more generous. The individuals are merely working for their corporation. The corporation has a commercial interest in selling its items to our membership.

While Roy states that he has received no compensation or expense from the company it should be made clear as to whether he has received any proofs or imprints by way of gift.

I certainly don't like to raise all these issues, but until further facts are presented my feeling is that there is no basis for any honorary membership to these two gentlemen. I am not sending Roy a copy of this letter as I sense there has been remarks of others which need further explanation.

As to your August 26, 1998 letter I am relieved that the $10 USAOG 1852 prooflike counterfeit does not exist and was a writing foul up. Under these circumstances any request for a picture is withdrawn.

As to your statement that you have seen dozens of the Franklin board 1853 $20 USAOG pieces I am wondering how often you saw the same coin over again. Would Rick have a record as to how many such submissions there have been and how many different pieces he has seen? Please have him send you or me his data on the number. I assume they were photographed before rejection by PCGS.

I hope PCGS has rejection information as it is very important. Each time an 1853 $20 USAOG prooflike was auctioned, it was probably submitted for encapsulation and then the disappointed owner on getting it back from PCGS would put it back up for auction and the cycle could repeat endlessly.

As to the open collar matter in your August 26©27 1998 letter Breen and I agreed that something belped position the blanks and did not confine them. Beyond that we did not bave adequately supported ideas. We knew that something was called an open collar by the Mint. I believe there was a mecbanism in the form of a 30 to 45 degree arc whicb was retracted before striking and returned by spring activation after the ejector or sweeper bad flicked off the struck coin. The arc served to stop the new blank whicb was pusbed forward over the lower die by a tongue in a groove. All of these elements could bave been mechanical, manual or a combination, some automatic and some not. I have struggled with this for years. With steam power Boulton had done all this mecbanically since 1788.

The idea of an open collar distant by 1/8th incb from the coin is impossible prior to steam coinage at the U.S. Mint. After steam coinage began the collar was a collar die. Where in the Reicb Journal did you read the theory? I hope you can ask someone if it is remembered.

A circular collar die diameter is naturally slightly larger than the planchet diameter.

Your glossary comment that an open and closed collar are both closed sbould be changed as per my above theory even if you do not completely accept it.

As to the Bay Area forgeries the use of a common 1835 half cent indicates that the coin could be destroyed to make a spark erosion die or a set of impact dies. A scarce coin would not have been used for destruction. Making 1835 forged half cents was not a moneymaking project. You say there were other coins forged by the same process? I have never seen one of the pieces you describe.

Bay Area forgeries I wrote up were published in the April 1979 "Numismatist", pp. 735-741, under the title "Superb Numismatic Forgeries are Upon Us".

I believe Jack Beymer would be helpful, if you could ask him about the matter. Ask him and do not wait for the Long Beach show, as you need the data for your book. Please advise me what you find out.

When Evelyn and I visited your teahouse facility, I told you that I would see if I could find an appropriate payment for a cup of tea as of the date when the tea ceremony generally began. I, therefore, enclose payment for a cup of tea to be consumed at some future date when the tea leaves indicate it is timely.

Not being able to read Japanese, I must rely on you or your group to let me know if the enclosed payment is of the proper period. I believe it is a Japanese bronze cash coin of the early 17th century minted in Tokyo and with the legend KANEI TSU HO. If this is not correct, please send it back and we will try again.

We were delighted with the beauty and the charm of the teahouse and fully realize the amount of planning and work which have gone into its development. You should be very proud of your accomplishment.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed herewith, in cash, is £5 10 sh. in payment of Account No. 991215.

I would be most interested to acquire any early books on British or American numismatics, or 18th Century Exchange Calculators which is what I just bought from you.

I also would like to acquire the Universal Magazine for 1750 as odd volumes often show up.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mrs. Dayton:

You will recall that in late December I bought a snap box guinea or sovereign scale from you. It was missing its swinging coin pan. I had the right to return it but prefer not to do so.

Since your firm specializes in instruments will it be possible for you to find me one or two more of these boxed fold up scales? Also, you could try to find me the missing swinging coin pan which may be found on another broken one. I will pay a fair price for what you find.

I collect different types of these scales and will appreciate your help in completing the one I have and finding a new more. I do not need the string suspension double pan balances.

If you can find anyone else who has them for sale, would you let me know. Please let me hear from you.

Sincerely yours,

Eric P. Newman
